

TIC and Complex Real Estate Litigation

Investors are often lured into real estate investments by the incentive of tax advantages and passive income. These investments come in many forms, including real estate investment trusts (REITs), tenancies-in-common (TICs) investments, participation interests, notes/bonds, limited partnerships, closely-held companies and other investment vehicles. Unfortunately, these investments are sometimes fraught with misrepresentations, conflicts of interest or misconduct that cause significant losses. Best & Flanagan's litigators have proven experience in protecting the rights of investors damaged by these investments, including Ponzi schemes and other self-dealing, which may also be governed by SEC or FINRA rules. Our attorneys understand the complexities of these investments and what it takes to recover on claims against responsible parties.
